

ABSTRACT

We consider the problem of sharing the revenues raised from broadcasting sports leagues. We take direct, axiomatic and game-theoretical approaches to the problem. Two polar rules (the equal-split rule and concede-and-divide) as well as compromises between them stand out. We also provide an application studying the case of sharing the revenue from broadcasting games in La Liga, the Spanish Football League.